

Delia Meth-Cohn

Editorial Director CEMEA, Economist Intelligence Unit

Delia Meth-Cohn is the Editorial Director for Continental Europe, Middle East and Africa, responsible for leading the Economist Intelligence Unit's services in the region, including the Corporate Network, a peer network for senior decision-makers of multinational companies operating in emerging markets. She manages an experienced team of analysts and editors in London, Geneva, Frankfurt, Dubai and Johannesburg.

Delia frequently chairs and speaks at conferences around the world. She has chaired discussions with government leaders in South Africa, Nigeria, Turkey, Egypt and Ukraine and moderated events on subjects ranging from urban sustainability, healthcare and energy to corporate social responsibility. She provides regular in-house briefings to global and regional executives at international companies, including Philips, Dupont, Oracle, Dow, Philip Morris International and Kraft.

Delia has worked with the Economist Group since 1993, when she helped launch and later became editor-in-chief of the monthly magazine Business Central Europe. She has written numerous in-depth reports on topics from the business case for Africa to global corporate structures and, as well as being the author of two travel books. She has an MA in International Politics from Columbia University and a BA from Durham University. She is married with two children.